

AT KINONDONI MUNICIPALITY AND UBUNGO DISTRICT, DAR ES SALAAM, TANZANIA

ABSTRACT

The study were intended to investigate on effects of globalization on the national security, a case study of Kinondoni municipality and Ubungo district, Dar es salaam, Tanzania. The study employed cross section survey design and simple random sampling. The used questionnaires as the instrument for data collection, the respondents were randomly sampled from the population and the data were analyzed in frequency and percentage, The study involved 90 respondents, who showed greater support in making the report interesting, despite the knowledge of globalization and security was not well understood within the society. The finding obtained according to research questions whereby from question stated that the causes of globalization which affect national security were technology advancement, unemployment, and poverty ,and from question stated that extent to which globalization has affected national security were found at very large extent globalization has affected national security then also from question stated that the impact of globalization on national security were terrorism, culture change, disease, job insecurity and human or drug trafficking. Then clear policies, rules and regulations recommended to control effective importation of weapons, illegal immigrations. Then development of special plans against threats due to globalization recommended to focus on prevention of external influence for strength national security and also strengthen military force in relation to global world recommended. The challenges were time consuming, lack of awareness and also limited support from governmental and national security staffs.

