

ABSTRACT

Non Governmental Organizations are increasing in number daily and play great role in the communities including promoting the National development in the country and , the aim of the study is to assess the contributions of NGO's in National security in Tanzania a case study of Kinondoni Dar es Salaam where by awareness of people and their attitudes was assessed . In this study, there was descriptive, cross-sectional study and research design. Random Sampling technique was used to the targeted population that aged (15-49) who agreed to participate in the study. Data collection procedures and analysis was done through self-administered questionnaire which was in Swahili language and 138 respondents were involved and then data was analyzed by descriptive statistics, frequency and statistical tests .the result shows 89% of respondent agree NGO's play a great role in promoting of national security and 11% disagree . Further recommendation studies which are relating with the problem should be done to identify several problems occurring due to NGO's; Contribution of NGO's in achieving national development, Assessment of the effects of NGO's to the national security ,Impacts of NGO's to economic growth in relation to human security

